Judgments must be credible and fair of you who have travelled long disbly, given my title, be wondering tances to be here tonight will probawhether you'll make the last train Your critics are indeed critics", with a brilliant opening remark: "Those lecture, "OFSTED and its

that teachers and headteachers anything accurate about the school or value for money, or tell them that they didn't already know. that the judgments made are valid have no sound reason to believe The problem with inspections is strate that the classes they observe judgments? And can you demonwhen observing the same class, publish evidence that these miniare representative would arrive at acceptably similar for which then the whole edifice crumbles would render different judgments another. If different is, consistent from one inspector to not the judgments are reliable, that mal requirements, these basic stanlessons? When are you going to that any pair of your inspectors believed? Can dards for evidence, are being met? The first step is to ask whether or inspector is you demonstrate of inspectors ordinary to be you were able to demonstrate that all your inspectors were highly likely to agree with each other. This Let us assume, generously, that

Better late than never.

be expressing the same prejudice. Validity (which you unfortucan be established in a number of nately confused with reliability) would be to see if your inspectors of what the data might show? ways. One standard procedure cost of one inspection. study could be done for about the you always say "we must talk", but inspectors' judgments. sure could added data on hundreds of schools judgments matched other eviyou take no action. Are you afraic (anonymously), so that this meadence. I have offered again and to make available valuebe compared established, simple procedures for establishing that it can do the job it claims to do since it has not adopted even the claims to do. those of a failing organisation dards can only be judged to be giving judgments credibility. OFSTED has signally failed to attend to these procedures. Its stanin summary, there are well are corroborated by a second HMI "Judgments" on a failing school in defence of OFSTED judgments: You made the following points

■ The approach taken for recordother internal self-investigations. This is no more satisfactory than ing evidence and judgments allows validity. The inspectors might all kind of reliability is no guarantee of consistency, have you? And if your published any evidence of internal pendent inspections of secondary about conflicting evidence" (Indereport on inspections? "The majorclearly implies that the majority of why did we have this statement in a report, HMI, 1994, page 10). This able to make appropriate decisions ity of registered inspectors were inspectors so consistently agree, Well, this is news. You haven't 1993-1994 a progress registered inspectors had to reconment draw heavily from hard evicile "conflicting evidence" dence and quantitative data ■ The core judgments on attain-rough-and-ready way. Furthermore, your statisticians have is that it is used in a very exactly how the quantitative data is given sufficient description of data", I do not believe schools are with regard to this "quantitative time in schools sitting in classrooms tors spend about 70 per cent of their - a very expensive activity? And interpreted. What little evidence we In that case, why do your inspecseem to be adopting the generally

Carol Taylor Fitz-Gibbon writes an open letter to Chris Woodhead about inspection standards low standards of your organisation. ratings properly. You can take that nately our Year 11 Information System a method of examination analysis OFSTED some years ago and using Commendably they are adopting a tion without acknowledging this. In called relative ratings. Unfortuas a benchmark for OFSTED to set Scotland, and they use a simplificaacknowledge the original work in recommendation we made as a target in your action plan. (YELLIS), we compute relative they tail properly they cannot back up with evidence. very wary of making any judgments side of caution and are certainly If anything, inspectors err on the

Wary they may be, accountable

Very few judgments are chal-

This is largely due to fear of whereby schools can defend themof any independent procedure making things worse and to the lack questioned. you down, or humiliate you in publarly nice to people who can close lic, and whose judgments cannot be It is always wise to be particu-

I would refer you to the case of such a charming one as yourself by the legal profession that Breeze Hill, which wished to take OFSTED to court but was advised judgments could never be chal-governors are content with ■ The great majority of heads and findings of the inspection management, evidence tency which we do through monieasy checking for internal consis-as they see it, of various weakindependent, confidential nesses in the school. the findings are not critical enough, Some heads are concerned when on which you base this statement? Perhaps you would refer us to the could offer professional advice on tions, that changes should be made negotiated with teachers' associaimproved. It is on such advice, that they have available could be how the mechanisms and resources ious weaknesses in their school No one favours children's life Heads who cannot deal with var-practices that sustain and motivate equate teachers but we also favour of proper, professional personnel chances being jeopardised by inadan effective teaching force The new framework encourages evaluated. It cannot be taken as inspectors to look at trends in valid simply on the basis of asserneed to be based on good evidence. school's performance, not just a tions of its current leader, even In summary, OFSTED should be Trends, like snapshots, the class-standard? up an evaluation to set a world-Will you use your influence to set Schools that are similar should com, one school in each pair should be subject to a regime of OFSTEDbe paired and then, by tossing inspections. This will all occur in funds equivalent to the costs of be enhanced with valice-added school performance tables soon to indicators such as those in the the current context of p blished type inspections and the other schools should instead receive pitals. It would be good if England is impossible but one on these lines could lead the way in social science surely as an industry that gets its wrong will have social troubles as society which gets its social science instead of being so dreadfully back-Netherlands, with feedbac : to hosphysical science wrong will have antiquated inspection system. production problems. ward as to continue to support your already being conducted in the You may say such an ex eriment be credibly, reliably, efficiently, validly and fairly assessed outcomes but those outcomes must Schools must be accountable for tre at the University of Newcastle-upon education and director of the curricu-Carol Taylor Fitz-Gibbon is professor of lum, evaluation and management cen

